Introduction

No one wants to think about being hurt while they are learning abroad, but sometimes it happens. This information about sexual harassment and sexual assault is offered not because these things happen with great frequency, but rather because the University of Minnesota takes these matters very seriously and understands the importance of being prepared to handle them.

If you are a victim of sexual assault or rape, remember:

IT IS NOT YOUR FAULT AND YOU ARE NOT ALONE!

According to the University of Minnesota (Policy 2.3.6), sexual assault and relationship violence, including threats of sexual assault and related relationship violence, are attacks not only on a person's body, but also on the person's dignity, and are not tolerated.

Sexual assault is any sexual contact (including, but not limited to sexual intercourse) when such contact is achieved without consent; or with the use of force, coercion, deception, or threat.

Rape is sexual intercourse that is achieved without consent or with the use of force.

Consent is informed, freely and actively given, and mutually understood. If physical force, coercion, intimidation, and /or threats are used, there is no consent. There is no consent if victim/survivor is mentally or physically incapacitated or impaired. This includes conditions due to alcohol or drug consumption, or being asleep or unconscious.

Anyone who experiences sexual harassment or sexual assault while abroad must deal with the stress of this unwanted event in a place and culture that is unfamiliar. Being away from the support and comfort of home can exacerbate feelings of hurt, confusion, anger, and loss of control. Keep in mind that although sexual violence of any kind can have an acute effect, most victims/survivors of these incidents find a way to recover without drastically altering their everyday lives.

If you are a victim of rape and/or sexual assault remember, there is no "right way" to react to experiencing sexual assault. Only the survivor can decide whom to tell and what steps to take next. Below are a few tips to consider:

- Most survivors find some comfort in talking with someone about the assault, journaling, and/or talking with a counselor. If possible, contact your program director (if studying abroad) or talk to a friend or relative, and contact the nearest resource included in this brochure, U.S. Embassy, Consulate, or Diplomatic Mission. Be sure to understand if the person you talk to is required to tell anyone else about what you share. The University's Aurora Center can offer confidential help: Visit the website at <http://www.umn.edu/aurora> or call the Help Line at 612-626-9111.

- Have your medical needs attended to at a clinic or emergency room. If you have the required medical, evacuation, and security insurance through the University of Minnesota, your medical care will be covered and you can receive advice on clinics and hospitals by contacting them. More at <http://www.international.umn.edu/travel/insurance/index.php#cisi>
- Consider whether you would like to make a police report.
 - If there is any chance you want to report your assault to the police now or in the future: Do not shower or douche; save the clothes you were wearing at the time of the assault in a paper bag; save sheets, blankets, or anything else that may have evidence in a paper bag. Do not throw anything away or try to clean up; go to a hospital, clinic, or emergency room where you can receive a sexual assault exam. Such an exam can be performed up to 72 hours after an assault, but it is most successful within the first 24 hours.
 - Remember that if you choose not to report the crime to the local police soon after the incident but change your mind later, forensic evidence may be lost—particularly if you have washed or changed your clothes.
 - U.S. Embassies, your program director, and the local organizations listed in this pamphlet can tell you about local police and legal procedures, as these can often be very different to those in the U.S. You should be aware that cultural and social attitudes to rape and sexual assault victims may vary greatly in different countries. If you choose to report the incident to the police, ask a friend or relative to go to the police station with you—many people find it helps not to be alone. Remember, only you can decide if you want to take legal action; no one else can make that decision for you.
 - In most countries, you must report the crime before leaving the country if you want it to be investigated. If you wait to report the crime on return to the U.S., many countries will not open a criminal investigation.
 - You may be covered by your renters/homeowners or travel insurance for any belongings you may have lost at the time of the assault. It is likely you will have to report the incident to the police in the country that you are in for the insurance to be valid.
- Survivors cannot change what has happened, but they do get to make their own decisions about what is best for their recovery. Some survivors feel that it is a personal victory to finish their overseas experience while others feel their recovery will be hastened by returning home.

Directory of Resources Abroad

The resources and contact details in this handbook are provided to assist victims of sexual harassment and assault. It should be noted that services differ widely around the world based on cultural norms and level of financial support.

We have done our best to locate quality resources based on the advice of our in-country partners as well as our students. Inclusion of a resource in this document does not indicate endorsement as the website, centers, and crisis lines have not been officially reviewed or approved by the University. If you have feedback on any of the resources included hereafter or would like to suggest a resource to be added during the next round of edits, please contact Stacey Tsantir at stsantir@umn.edu.
